B of A hands Raugust $500 scholarship

Hartnell sophomore Kathy Raugust received a scholarship from the Bank of College Awards America program March 26.

Raugust entered competition for the $2,500 scholarship, the ultimate Bank of America award, in the areas of science and engineering.

An 'A' student, Raugust is majoring in biology and said that she is interested in going into the field of sports medicine. She is an accomplished performer with the Hartnell track and field team and last May won the Northern California Pentathlon Championsips.

Raugust will be going to San Francisco April 24 for final competition for the $2,500 first place scholarsip.

She said she was surprised at her achievement, "but the competition is going to be tough."

State Chancellor's office differs with Madsen colleges have adopted state ap-

by Charles E. Rader

In the wake of a six-hour meeting on the firing of Hartnell's affirmative action coordinator, the State Chan-cellor's office has added its disagreement to that of over 20 representatives of minority groups.

Juana Barbarita, administrator for affirmative action plans for the Chancellor of Community Colleges, contradicted statements by Hartnell Superintendent-President Dr. Gibb R. Madsen that Serena's affirmative action plan was faulty.

"I don't know why...(trustees) just don't go ahead and approve it," she said in a later interview.

Further, she added that trustees only have four days - not the 60 they decided on - in which to submit an affirmative action plan to the State Chancellor's office in Sacramento. Otherwise they will be reported to the state legislature for not complying with the law, she said

Trustees at their March 24 meeting unanimously agreed to submit an af firmative action plan to the State Chancellor's office within 60 days.

But they would not rescind their March 3 unanimous decision to fire

Serena had been criticized by the board for including in his draft of an affirmative action plan a clause allowing community involvement in the hiring of some school employees.

Madsen told a crowd of 200 on March 24 that:

only eight out of 61 community proved affirmative action plans. ·Serena's plan did not meet the minimum state requirement and would jeopardize the school if implemented •Hartnell adopted its first affirmative action plan in 1975 and revised that plan in 1979. Both plans were accepted by the State Chancellor's office.

But Barbarita says, "It wasn't until David (Serena) followed the committee's recommendation and completely rewrote the 1979 affirmative action plan that Hartnell finally had

Communities in other areas are involved in the hiring process and that practice "strengthens a district's af-firmative action plan," she said.

She said that 36 out of 70 districts ts in California community colleges have adopted state approved affirmative action plans and she expects another 17 or 18 will have theirs approved by the April 10 deadline.

Not much will happen to schools not complying with the law, she conceded. "I don't really have any enforcing powers."

interpersonnel However, an government grant is helping her find 'alternate ways to make schools comply with the law," she said. Soon Barbarita will be suggesting com-pliance plans to the Board of Governors and it is her belief that they will deliver in 12 months a decision to support her because of the support they have already shown.

In addition, groups and individuals aimed charges of racism directly at Madsen while others aimed at the entire board.

None addressing the board had a chance to speak at the March 17 board meeting. That meeting was put off one week by trustees emerging from a four hour closed personnel session. At that time trustees announced they would hold open an option to rehire Serena after they received more community and student input

The final decision would come on or before June 30, the date Serena's one year employment contract officially terminates, Trustee Allen Caldeira announced.

The public made sure they had their say March 24 - some 200 people attended the board meeting and over 20 addressed the board.

This institution is well known for its history of discrimination," said Pilar Ugale, MEChA vice president. "I can't believe the board made such an ignorant decision."

Jim Ferrel, a member of the affirmative action advisory committee, said that Madsen discriminated against Serena by adding in an evaluation that Serena was closely associated with and only concerned

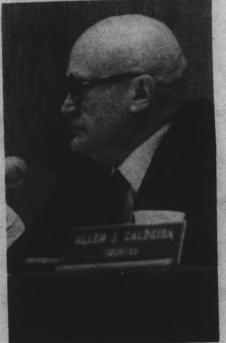

(Please turn to p.6)

David Serena affirmative action coordinator

"I can't imagine a situation where a person is evaluated and doesn't know who his evaluators are," said ALRB attorney Phyllis Turner.

"All managers are evaluated under the same....objective procedures," Hartnell Superintendent-President Dr. Gibb R. Madsen said.

Editorial: Coordinator was fired unjustly

With 200 people in attendance, more than 20 biblical Solomon. speakers from most of the community's ethnic groups verbally bombarded trustees, expressing outrage at the procedures used to fire the affirmative action coordinator.

Responding for Dr. Gibb R. Madsen and trustees, Dr. Victor Wm. Willits said it was unwise to change procedures in the middle of the year while those procedures are in practice. Wait until the inactivity of summer, Willits suggested.

Willits' solution is a verbatim echo of what Madsen, who said he was displeased with evaluation procedures for administrative staff, told the academic senate in mid-1978.

This is how Affirmative Action Coordinator David Serena and other managerial staff are evaluated:

•The manager gets to select questions pertaining to his job performance, which Madsen will later ask to as many hand-picked evaluators as he chooses. Only trustees, and of course Madsen, are privy to the identities of evaluators.

 Madsen receives answers verbally and transcribes them onto paper in fragmented sentences.

•Madsen's interpretation of others' opinions, along with his own written opinion, are then presented to the Board of Trustees for evaluation.

One of Serena's evaluators told us that after he read all 25 anonymous evaluations, he was unsure which one was his!

So, did Serena get a fair trial?

We feel he couldn't have unless Madsen is a

And if Serena didn't get a fair shake, and nothing can be done about procedures until summer, as Willits suggests, then others may be fired arbitrarily in the interim

Trustee Allen Caldeira says that in addition to the 26 evaluations (Madsen's included), student and community input was weighed.

What wasn't weighed was a letter from the affirmative action advisory board, a group composed of, and accepting input from, all community ethnic groups. That letter wasn't in the package trustees considered when they unanimously agreed to fire Serena March 3.

We feel that letter is the epitome of community input because it barred no one when it was drafted.

The net result of the evaluations show that almost all of Serena's anonymous accusers felt he was responsible for the affirmative action plan's delay and that he had a "narrow scope" and only sought to benefit the Chicano community.

Juana Barbarita is the administrator for affirmative action plans in the State Chancellor's office. Sacramento.

According to Barbarita, Serena's affirmative action plan was the first submitted by Hartnell to fully meet state requirements. The other plans, submitted in 1975 and 1979, were rejected by ad hoc committees, she said.

Madsen and trustees claim the state-approved draft will "jeopardize the school" because it allows the community a say in hiring some employees.

But Barbarita says that community involvement in hiring procedures exists in other schools and that practice strengthens a school's affirmative action

Do Madsen and trustees want a strong affirmative action plan at Hartnell?

If firing the man who developed a strong affirmative action plan, and, in fact, developed Hartnell's only state-sanctioned plan is any indication, then the answer would appear to be a resounding

The majority of a multi-ethnic crowd of 200 publicly praised the embattled affirmative action coordinator on March 24, while most of his accusers - but not their accusations - remained un-

In the firing of the affirmative action coordinator there is an irony: The lack of a strong and equitable plan, like the one Serena wrote, is allowing Madsen and trustees to fire him for no good reason.

And if Serena is fired for no good reason, what caliber of affirmative action coordinator will Hartnell have next?

The process by which David Serena was removed is blatantly unjust and not in keeping with the "democratic process" the board so fervently

It's disgusting to know that a process diametrically opposing a tenet on which our country is based - democracy - is deeply embedded in an institution of higher learning.

Equal Time

Women's liberation is slow in coming

by Charlene Boehne

During the last decade, undergraduate women have been finally allowed into a number of universities previously open to men only. These institutions and others have given women a chance to elevate their influence in the academic world.

Women have been given the opportunities to enter all areas of the business world — a thing it "just wasn't fitting for a lady to do" in the days of Scarlett O'Hara

When you compare these feminist victories to the history of civilization, you will realize the women's liberation movement and the right for women to pursue freedom, liberty and happiness is relatively recent

Even though the future looks promising, women still have a way to go.

The outlook for the Equal Rights Amendment seems dim. State legislatures have reached a stalemate which is crippling the chances for the proposed amendment insuring women their rights.

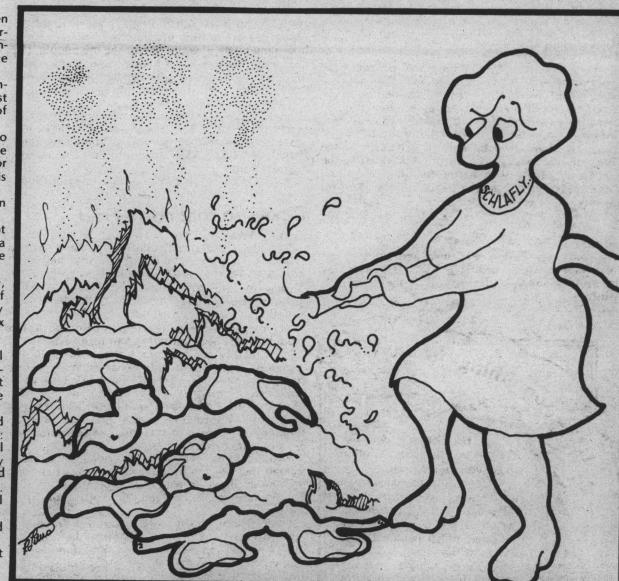

One of the most controversial issues of our time, the amendment's major opposition consists of traditional type women who are concerned mainly about the psychological effect on society if unisex toilets become a reality

These Phyllis Schlafly types are avoiding the real issues on hand, such as job discrimination, and insist women are "inferior", so to speak, and do not deserve the equal protection of the laws and the same rights that men have.

Kurt Waldheim, UN Secretary General reported to the UN Commission on the status of women: "While the women represent half the global population and one third of the labor force, they receive only one-tenth of the world income and own less than one percent of the world property. They are also responsible for two thirds of all working hours."

How can this be true in this age of equality and affirmative action programs?

Maybe "you've come a long way baby" - but you still have a long way to go.

Backtalk

National Enquirer sacrifices principles

by Jerry Loeb

Carol Burnett won a $1.6 million lawsuit against the National Enquirer. The Enquirer, the Florida-based scourge, lost the decision to the tune of $24,000 per word.

On March 6, 1976, the Enquirer featured a 62word short story about the activities of Burnett in a posh Washington nightclub and rowdy behavior directed toward Henry Kissinger. Burnett disputed this, saying the incident was not true and maliciously damaged her career and self-esteem. The Enquirer held that although the facts were wrong, there was no malicious damage done.

One important decision in the case was made by | the judge. He said the Enquirer is a magazine and not a newspaper. This is important because a newspaper has tighter deadlines than does a magazine, and therefore some discrepancy in facts is to be tolerated. In the case of a magazine, such as Time or Life, there is more time to get the facts straight, so a magazine is more liable than a newspaper.

I remember the National Enquirer best as a summer worker in Englishtown, N.J. When lunchtime came we would all go to the corner deli for lunch, and, invariably, a copy of the National Enquirer or Washington Star — depending on which one had the flashier headlines. I would sit with the rest of them in the cool shade of the shed and listen to them argue about what was true and not true, who was doing what to whom, and so forth. Unlike some people who buy the National Enquirer, I was not titillated in the least.

Nor was I titillated when I walked into my neighborhood Seven-Eleven store in December of last year and saw much to my disgust, a "last picture" of John Lennon lying on a cold slab in a New York morgue after his tragic murder. It reminded me of the same mentality tthat made that photographer sneak in a camera and take a picture of husband-killer Ruth Snyder in New York in 1927 as the switch was thrown on the electric chair.
I was disgusted. I wrote a letter to the National Enquirer castigating them for their lack of sensitivity for printing that photo. The letter was never printed in their "letters" column. As a matter of fact, they never print anything regarding their pictures, pro or con.

Other celebrities are lining up to take a shot at the Enquirer. Actress Shirley Jones and husband Marty Ingels have a suit pending, as do Helen Reddy and her husband Jeff Wald and Paul Lynde.

Johnny Carson influenced the case with his comments on late-night T.V. Two jurors were dismissed from the case because they heard his remarks about an article written aboutt his wife and him.

The point is the battle lines are being drawn and the Enquirer will now have to think twice before they run such stories. The best shot that can be taken at publications such as the Enquirer are made by the "kings of the marketplace," i.e., the public. If people would stop patronizing the Enquirer in droves, such tripe would not be pub-

The Enquirer has a highly paid staff that un-fortunately sacrifices journalist principles for the sake of some housewives' vicarious thrills

If the National Enquirer interjected the same venom and vigor in pursuing corruption and social injustices as they do toward human failings, they just might win me over.

Style not appropriate

Editor, the Sentinel:

After reading your write-up of the interview you conducted with me, I had some difficulty recognizing myself. While I do not contest the quotes attributed to me, I must protest the manner of presentation. For a supposedly unbiased, objective reporter, I feel you tend to use a style of writing more sensational than is appropriate.

As I stated in the interview, I wanted to follow up on my complaint. Mr. David Serena was quite cooperative and introduced me to several of the ASHC officers. After speaking to them at length, I feel that we have opened avenues of communication not previously explored. Since I still feel that the nominating and appointment procedures need changes, I have been trying to get a definite answer as to which constitution, or parts thereof, the ASHC officers are using for their decision-making.

As of this date, 3-30-81, the ASHC officers have only been able to give me a copy of the new constitution. However I have been informed that they are still working at least partially under the old constitution, which does not seem to be available. When the problems with the constitutions are resolved, then I will be able to get down to the issue of amending the constitution or initiating the necessary changes to better facilitate an equal representation for all students on the Student Senate.

The old constitution was null and void as of November 1980, according to Trustee Lloyd Lowrey Jr. and the enabling measures of the new constitution.

Serena is best 'driver'

Editor, the Sentinel:

My name is James Clyde, I'm an American Indian and currently attending Hartnell College. What really makes me mad is that this institution doesn't have an affirmative action plan and more recently losing the affirmative action coordinator. Recently, one board member stated the affirmative action plan was like a car and the coordinator is the driver. The board felt the school didn't have the best driver they could get for the car.

But ask yourself this, how can somebody do a 100% job if there is not an affirmative action plan? I feel David Serena is the best driver for the job and has been wronged by the board and the blame should be put on the people who have been running this institution for years without change.

I came to this institution to get an education and get away from racism, but this college is full of racism, be it with students, teachers and even some board members. I would like to see my people, the Chicanos, Mexicanos, Chinese and Black communities join together and demand an affirmative action plan and affirmative action coordinator, David Serena, at this college.

I would like to commend all the people that turned out to support Mr. Serena and affirmative acton at the March 24 governing board meeting. Namely MEChA, ASHC and all the community organizations.

After arm surgery, Lonnie Johnson gained the artistic touch needed to become a talented ceramicist.

by Susan Avila .

In 1975, after surgery on his right arm, a 46-year-old disabled veteran walked into the Hartnell Visual Arts Facility and asked what type of art he could do with one arm.

Now, with the use of both arms, Lonnie Johnson is gaining recognition as a gifted ceramicist through the many exhibits he takes part in.

With the encouragement and guidance of Gary Smith, Hartnell art gallery director, Johnson progressed through basic glazes, glaze mixing and working with clay. He has taken art classes in everything from woodcarving to sculpture, and is currently enrolled in ceramics and foundation

Through these classes he has learned the importance of space and light and the basics of art, and through this art he has found himself; Johnson is a creator.

When Johnson was in the army he was a part-time chef. He cooked at least two hot meals daily for soldiers in the field. He was featured in a newspaper article and had the privilege of cooking for such celebrities as Danny Kaye and Vikki

Johnson considers cooking an art form. He explains that creating from basics is art, combining simple foods to make a good meal requires creativity; therefore it is art. This was Johnson's only experience with art prior to 1975.

Johnson believes that the challenge of taking a piece of clay and a bit of earth and making something completely different and new is his main reason for sticking with ceramics. The satisfaction and pride he obtains have him spending much time at work in the ceramics iohnson's pieces have been seen at the 1980 Monterey County Fair, Hartnell art shows, and a 1979 ceramics show at the University of California, Santa Barbara, which featured ceramicist Karen Breschi and Joe Soldate. Through the month of April he has a one-man-show at the Seaside City Hall exhibition gallery, and beginning April 29 his works will be a part of Hartnell's student show in the a sketch that Johnson often does late at night when unable to sleep. The rext step is to work and shape the clay, experimenting with the design until it is just right. Rough edges are smoothed off. The trick is to know the precise phase of dryness that will work best.

The piece is fired twice in an extremely hot kiln. The first firing is called "bisque" and serves to completely dry and bake the clay so that it is solid and strong. A glaze or combination of glazes is then applied and the piece is fired again to become the final product.

The human body in variation is Johnson's favorite theme. He believes that to alter the body slightly in proportion or radically by removing a vital part adds to his feeling of being a creator. He strongly denies copying ideas and says that all his pieces are original because there is always more to explore in art, there is no end.

Johnson has no favorité piece; they are all special. Because of these attachments, accidents and disasters are very hard to bear. In the beginning, he gave away many pieces, not realizing their value, but now he rarely sells or gives any away because of the strong ties to them.

When asked where he keeps six years' worth of sculpture, he chuckles and replies that they are at his house wherever there is room. His backyard is filled with fountains and bodies, his house with vases and bowls, his garage with such toys as a little red wagon and the walk to his door is lined with seated, headless people.

What does his wife think of all these ceramic sculptures in her home? She does not mind in the least. According to Lonnie, Daisy Johnson is proud of her husband and encourages him constantly. When Johnson is excited about his art and rambles about it, she is patient and hears him with support and without complaint.

There is no mistake; Lonnie Johnson is an artist. He loves his work and recommends it to everyone. He strongly believes that art has a place for everyone, that it is relaxing and important and the only place that anyone can discover his true desires and potentials. Johnson did and by his example, so can we.

Student loans and grants may be affected by government cutbacks

Pell Grants, formerly Basic Educational Opportunity Grants, have been frozen by the Reagan administration.

These grants are used by many students who cannot afford to go to college.

Congress has several weeks to act on the proposals requested by the President but if it doesn't the cuts will become effective.

The Reagan proposals consist of the following:

•Student loans would be limited to the specific amount the student needs after family contributions and all other aid is deducted.

•A nine percent interest rate would be tagged on to the Pell Grant. This is an increase from the present rate which is less substantial

•Students would be required to contribute more to their educational needs through a $750 "self help" contribution which would be used in calculating eligibility for aid

•Families would be required to increase their contribution toward educational costs.

upper-income and "Middle families are the ones that will be affected by this situation," Macias said. "The lower-income families will not."

Macias believes the reason middle and upper-income families are being affected is that the government believes they have greater access to other means of financial assistance.

The Hartnell financial aid office has helped "about 700 students" this year, Macias said.

A representative of the Chinese community, Glen Chee said:

.. this business of remarks made on Serena's evaluation by faculty members like 'he hangs out with a certain minority,' ... is racist and unrealistic. If I was the affirmative action coordinator I would also be accused. After all, Chinese people hang out with Chinese people, right?"

Hartnell instructor Roberto Melendez said he was one of Serena's evaluators. After reading all 25 evaluations he wasn't even sure which one was his, he said.

"The whole process was highly subjective and openly racist," he charged.

Melendez said Hartnell has a "clear record documented" on how administration gets rid of staff.

Miguel Auclair-Valdez, who spoke on behalf of La Raza Lawyers Association of Monterey County, said Madsen should be removed from the evaluation process because his submitted opinion could bias that of the "Technically speaking he (Madsen) didn't have to ask anybody for input,"

Caldeira said in a later interview.

Caldeira said that Madsen "bent over backwards" to receive input in evaluating Serena

According to Caldeira, this is how the evaluation process for managers at Hartnell works:

•The manager picks the questions which Madsen will later ask to as many evaluators as he chooses.

 Identities of evaluators are known only to Madsen and Trustees. •Madsen receives responses verbally and transcribes them onto •Madsen submits the above and his own written opinion to the board for consideration Caldeira said the board also took all other input into consideration before firing Serena. He said the board weighed input from the League of United Latin American Citizens, for example.

Lilly Cervantes is the president of LULAC.

'We really never had input," she said. The board in evaluating Serena never even considered a letter from the affirmative action advisory committee, a community group com-prised of and open to all minorities, she said.

William Melendez, advisory committee member, said Madsen pur-posefully deleted the letter in an attempt "to discredit an employee."

Serena said he was opposed to the evaluation from the beginning.

"I told Madsen I knew what the outcome would be," he said in a later interview.

Second Opinion

Japanese proverb: Engage in sports for fun

by Dave "Doc" Moseley

San Francisco Chronicle sportswriter Bruce Jenkins recently pointed out something about baseball that you won't find in a box score.

In 'The Rising Sun has Settled in Arizona,' Jenkins quoted Chicago Cubs' manager Joey Amalfitano as comparing Japan's Taiyo Whales to "a good Double-A team."

The Whales, training in Arizona along with other Japanese teams, had beaten the Cubs once in three games, scoring 24 runs on 36 hits in the series. If that's a Double-A performance, what does Amalfitano think of the other 25 major league

Actually, we hear, the Japanese play at a level close to that of the Americans, but their home facilities can't touch the fabulous stadia here Maybe that's why Sadaharu Oh could manage only to hit about 70 more home runs than Hank Aaron; his surroundings embarrassed him.

But the Japanese seem to have more feeling for the game than the final score Example:

Wrote Jenkins, "Joe Pepitone (former Yankee and Astro, among others) took his flamboyant, self-centered act to Japan a few years ago and lasted less than a month."

Tadahiro Ushigome, the Whales' public relations director, was then quoted as saying, "The (Japanese) fans hate spoiled players; they don't last long."

This partially explained what I'd been feeling since I watched — and photographed — some Hartnell agriculture students of Oriental background in a pickup game on the lawn near the library a month

With summer — and baseball season — almost here, you'll undoubtedly chance to see a game in progress on the local school diamond, featuring red-blooded American kids passionately embracing the blue sky and green grass, apple pie, hot dogs and Mom, and hoping to Providence that they can sidestep the agony of defeat.

"Whaddya man, out?" they will cry. "You didn't even get the tag down!" Or, "Hey, it was foul by nine miles, (expletive)!"

When I watched the Japanese students, playing with a tennis ball and a two-by-two for a bat, I was inspired by their lust for the game, and not the scoreboard.

There were no arguments. No complaints. No charges of blindness or idiocy or questions of paternity.

And don't tell me I couldn't have understood them anyway. The bottom of the ninth transforms all language barriers.

I wondered why. Why no heavy emphasis on winning? Why no morbid fear of losing?

Having played my share of sandlot games (and never once playing on sand), I'm used to it that way. Win or don't play, and win at all costs. Make us proud of you, son.

Double-A, Joey? Itoshiki oshieo idaki.

Getris, Haddan named All-CC

Center Martha Getris and guard Jill Haddan, both sophomores, have been named to the All-Coast Conference women's basketball team.

The under-the-basket strength of Getris and Haddan's shooting ability and ball control were large factors in the Panthers' gaining a spot in the conference playoffs this season.

Getris, who was also active in volleyball and track and field at Hartnell, has accepted a two-year athletic scholarship to the University of Houston

Rose Doerfler churns through her event, the butterfly, in the 200-yard medley relay against Ohlone March 20. The Hartnell relay time of 2:06.99, a 15-second victory margin, helped the Panther women's team to a 54-41 defeat of the Renegades. Doerfler also had a win in the 100 butterfly and Karen Schramm brought home firsts in the 200 freestyle, 200 individual medley and 100 backstroke. The women are undefeated and in first place in the Coast Conference. —photo by John Nelson
